

Title: Space Exploration History

Space exploration began in the 20th century with the launch of the first artificial satellites. The Soviet Union's Sputnik was the first satellite to orbit Earth in 1957, marking the beginning of the space age.

Since then, both robotic and human missions have advanced our understanding of the solar system. NASA's Apollo missions landed the first humans on the moon, and space telescopes like Hubble continue to observe distant galaxies.